The Independent Republican voters of Pennsylvania have proved to be wiser than their leaders. They foresaw that to vote for Stewart as: was originally intended, could not fail to result in the election of the Stalwart State ticket. The Labor ticket also stood in the way. The Stalwarts from the outset counted upon the Labor ticket drawing votes from Pattison; and when it was discovered in this city and other localities that the Stalwarts were plowing with the Labor heifer, the Independent Republicans realized that the only way to effect their first great object and original aim, namely, the defeat of the Cameron forces, no other recourse was presented but to vote directly for Pattison.

The Disputch says: The most remarkable aim, namely, the detect of the Cameron forces, no other recourse was presented but to vote directly for Pattison.

The Dispatch says: The most remarkable phase of this result is that it was attained by Independent Republicans voting directly for Pattison. It was discovered several days ago that the immense corruption fund of the Stalwarts was being used with effect of among the purchasable class of Democrats. Money poured in from New York and Washington, and was placed in the hands of Democratic strikers in every part of the State. Recoming alarmed at this, thousands of Independent Republicans determined that the purpose for which they organized—the defeat of the Cameron ticket—should not miscarry, and they therefore abandoned Stewart and voted directly for Pattison. This action was observed in the returns from most of the precincts of this county, where there was an actual decrease from the Wolfe vote.
